ADVANCE PRAISE FOR TEXTUAL NON SENSE

‘While owing something to Paradise Lost, Proust, The Faerie Queen, and Middlemarch, Robert Crawford’s book is nevertheless both short and wholly original. Its shortness is enhanced by a succinct brevity, and its originality by a youthfully fresh, ground-breaking novelty. Seldom in my long literary career have I read such a length-defying book.’

– Arthur Quiller-Couch

‘Epoch-making, career-defining, impact-busting’

– Jodie Bullet

‘Textual Non Sense has made me see literature from a wholly new angle – somewhere between 183 and 187 degrees. After reading the book I felt devastated, harrowed, and yet strangely uplifted, blessed with a radiant sense of poignant and benign resolution. If you read only one book this year, then this may not be the one for you, but if you read, say, piles of over thirty-five poetry books and loads and loads of fiction, make sure to consider this volume as a possible addition to your piles.’

– Sir Reginald Allsoles, Principal, Coca College Cambridge

‘Breathtaking!’

– Chip Gudgeon, editor, Literature and Asthma

‘I cannot think of a better Christmas present to accompany a subscription to the Royal Society of Intense Bookishness’

– Dame Maria Babbitt, President, Royal Society of Intense Bookishness

‘Magnificent when under full sail.’

– Jane’s Fighting Ships
